

LINDSEY VONN

February 19, 2016

I am making this statement in relation to the video I posted on Facebook earlier today, where I was hammering the binding of my broken ski from today's race. This was a huge mistake born out of the frustrating race I had today and was in no way, shape or form a reflection on the performance of the HEAD Race Team, and the HEAD skis and bindings which I race on and which have been instrumental in my success. In fact, thank goodness the binding released as it should, preventing a possible injury.

The video was posted on social media to express my emotions but I understand how it could be misinterpreted.

I love my HEAD skis and bindings and I cannot apologize enough to HEAD and the HEAD Race Team for today's unfortunate event.

I am really proud to be part of the HEAD family.
